Funding Short-Term Academic Visitors

We are pleased to announce a fund for hosting short-term academic visitors for the current and coming academic years.

This call is mainly intended for visitors that present talks during their visit, and also meet with graduate students regarding their research.

Funding will include flight tickets (economy class, up to $1500), accommodation, local transportation from and to Ben-Gurion airport, and possibly a small honorarium on a per case basis.

The nomination should include the following details:

1. Name of the visitor, affiliation
2. Tentative dates
3. Expected activities during the visit (e.g. lectures, talks, meetings with students, joint research, etc.) and other possible benefits of the visit
4. CV of the visitor (including list of publications)
5. Justification letter from the host
6. Required budget, and the host's expected participation in the expenses

Priority will be given to visits that will be partially funded by the host, to visitors that will be hosted by more than one member, and to visitors with influential activities.

Hosts should be members of the Hiroshi Fujiwara Cyber Security Research Center. Hosts that are not yet members can submit their membership request together with the application.

Deadline: At least two months before the planned visit.

Support is subject to available budget.
